It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

The Castle Square Theatre

"That Exemplary Theatre in Boston,"

WILLIAM DEAN HOWELLS

TO successfully complete six years of continuous dramatic performances, with twelve appearances for each of the three hundred and twelve weeks, is a record which has made the Castle Square Theatre Dramatic Stock Company known throughout America, and gained for the Castle Square Theatre a prominent place in the dramatic history of Boston. The patrons of this playhouse have always shown a peculiar personal interest in its achievements and the work of those who have from time to time been members of the stock company identified with it, and the demand which has resulted in the present publication is typical of the fidelity and loyalty of the Boston amusement seeking public.

One of the most noteworthy features of the Castle Square Theatre is the extreme liberality of the management. Everything is done for the convenience and comfort of the patrons, and great care is taken to remove all the objectionable features so common in public places.

That part of the theatre technically known as the "front of the house," including ticket-sellers, ushers and the many other attachés who work for the convenience and comfort of patrons, has been instructed to leave no stone unturned that every patron be pleased, and in departing carry away good tidings of great joy. The immense audiences, including, especially at the matinees, an unusually large number of women and children, are the best testimony to that appreciation which excellence begets. The list of regular subscribers who come without fail to every play, many enthusiasts coming twice a week, is a large one, guaranteeing a patronage of which any theatre management might justly be proud.

Individuals of the highest standing in the community not only patronize these productions from week to week, but also give the management the benefit of advice and encouragement, expressed both privately and in the public prints, some highly endorsing the scheme as a great public educator worthy of conscientious support by all, including the most critical. Visitors from other cities, actors and dramatic managers, have come to see for themselves the enterprise of this theatre, and many have taken their cue from the Castle Square Theatre in similar undertakings.

The management has reason to congratulate itself because of words of praise from distinguished critics and other literary and artistic men and women of our own and other cities, who have shown their appreciation by many hearty words. The Boston newspapers have realized the character and significance of the work going on, and have been kind, helpful and discriminating in their criticisms.

At all times, the best obtainable talent in America has been secured and all plays have been staged with the best scenery, costumes and other accessories procurable. The completeness of the productions has been a matter of great surprise to those visiting the theatre from time to time and has been a source of great pleasure to the long list of regular patrons, who have given in return a loyalty never before equalled in Boston. On the part of the company the results have been reached only by means of continuous study from morning until the fall of the curtain on the evening performance.

A few statistics will best show the extent of the Castle Square Theatre dramatic season of the last six years and the magnitude of the work accomplished in this time. The original intent in establishing the stock company was to present a new play every week, and this policy has been followed persistently except at times when the continuation of an attraction was made imperative by the demands of the public. During the three hundred and twelve weeks since the beginning of the career of the Castle Square Theatre Dramatic Stock Company, May 3, 1897, there have been produced two hundred and twelve different plays, and of these, forty-six have been repeated one or more times, and among the remarkable successes which have interrupted the following of the policy of weekly productions may be named: "The Prodigal Daughter," given six consecutive weeks; "Bells of Haslemere," "Heart of Maryland," "Great Ruby," and "A Temperance Town," given for four weeks each.

With the exception of the two days' closing of the theatre at the time of the death of President McKinley, the stock company has been in continuous service, winter and summer, for six years and has therefore appeared 3,700 times since its original organization. Of these, one hundred and eight appearances of the company were made at Music Hall in the summer months of 1902, when the Castle Square Theatre was necessarily closed for structural repairs.

It is interesting to know that it has been the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company and the continuous management of those at present directing the affairs of the Castle Square Theatre that have made this record, the public having accepted the inevitable changes in the organization from time to time with every evidence of confidence in the judgment of those in control. In the six years, besides the regular members of the company, there have appeared a large number of specially engaged actors, who have filled the places of those away on vacations or enjoying a much needed rest. In addition, hundreds of young people have gathered the rudiments of the theatrical profession by temporary identification with the organization.

The book contains the pictures of nearly all who have been regular members of the company during the six years.

Among those who have appeared in principal parts and whose pictures are not found in the following pages may be mentioned:

Susette Willey, Caroline Frances Cook, Frances Drake, Loraine Dreux, May Buckley, Eva Westcott, Meta Maynard, Kate Ryan, Alice Davenport, Sadie Stringham, Lizzie Gale, Alberta Gallatin, Alethe Craig, Lisle Leigh, Lucy Spinney, Therese Milford, Florence Baker, Mabel Spencer, Walter

Perkins, Geo. Richards, Arnold Reeves, Eugene Canfield, Richard Nesmith, George Ober, George K. Henery, Warren Cook.

Of the "extra people" who have gained valuable experience at the Castle Square Theatre, many of whom are now playing principal parts in other companies, note is made of the following :

Sadie H. Galloupe, Phyllis Ralston, Mabel Colcord, Marie Pettes, Margaret Dunn, Daisy E. Kirk, Sarah Kingsley, Frank Minzey, G. Corliss Giles, B. F. Duffy, Geo. W. Sterling, Paul Linton, Charles D. Rice, Robt. Hall, John B. Walker, Louis Lytton, Roland Gillis, Horace L. Pierce, Geo. F. Carroll, W. C. Mason, B. C. Buswell, J. G. Murphy, Louis Moskowitz, Edwin P. Does, Augustus Ungar, John F. Beck, Wm. W. DeWolf, Philip Drew, T. W. Townsend, T. B. Dillaway.

The editor has endeavored to make as complete a record of programs as possible, but takes no responsibility for any inaccuracies arising from temporary changes in the casts on account of illness or indisposition of the actors or from any other causes.

The record is reprinted from the programs used in the theatre during the several weeks, and will be found to be substantially correct. In the case of plays running more than one week the changes for each week have been noted, and careful account has been taken of the musical programs.

The short stories accompanying the pictures might have been extended indefinitely, but the individual recollections of the reader will prove far more satisfactory than any words that might have been added by the editor.

The book has been compiled and printed to supply the demand of many patrons of the house, who desire a remembrance of the pleasant hours spent with their friends across the footlights.

JAMES R. PITMAN

Mr. Pitman, the stage director of Castle Square Theatre, has acquired his great wisdom of stage affairs from his forty-five years' experience with plays and actors. For more than twenty-five years he superintended the productions at the Boston Museum at a time when the "Old Museum" was making stage history. From the knowledge derived from his personal acquaintance with the great stock actors and "stars" of the past half century he has framed a standard of excellence which he strives to reach in all his work.

With the exception of a half dozen plays he has directed every production during the past six years. His success during these years has afforded pleasure to many thousands of patrons.

Unremitting in his labor, he personally arranges every detail behind the curtain. His "plots" for the various heads of departments "back of the house" are marvels of completeness.

The "plot" for the stage carpenter shows what scenery is to be built or arranged. The "plot" for the scenic artist guides the scene painters in their work. The property man is given a "plot" showing the arrangement of all furniture and articles used on the stage. The electrician is given directions for all lighting effects, and so on through every department. All these directions are written or drawn on paper pasted in a continuous roll often more than twenty feet in length.

The stage director "casts" all the plays and his decision must be accepted by the actor without question.

Every emergency, from the illness of the players to the accidents of the mechanical work, must be met by the stage director and the trouble corrected so that the performance may go on with the least friction possible.

He directs at every rehearsal, giving the actors the stage business he wishes done to produce the effects he has already studied out. In almost every case the actor is given a manuscript "part" containing only his own lines and "cues." At these rehearsals the parts are fitted together and the actor learns the story of the play and the individual peculiarities of the character he is to portray.

He also instructs the "supers" and "extra people" in their "business" and shows them where they fit in.

Mr. Pitman is rarely seen "in front" excepting during a first performance.

LILLIAN LAWRENCE

Miss Lawrence, the "Leading Lady" of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company, was a member of the original company and with the exception of sixteen and a half months from May 13, 1901, to September 1, 1902, she has played during the six years of the company's existence.

The uniform excellence of her work is marvellous when one considers the very wide range of characters she has been obliged to assume. In her opening part six years ago when she played "Helen Truman" in "The Wife," she reached the heart of her audience and time has been unable to shake the regard in which she has ever since been held. She is a wonderful actress indeed who can please at all times. Miss Lawrence has endeared herself to all the people with whom her work has brought her in contact and in the many trying hours incident to her profession her great courtesy and kind consideration for the feelings of others has proved a shining example. It is not alone her success with the patrons of the theatre that shows her worth, but also in the spirit of comradeship that has always existed between her and the various members of the company.

From her many parts it is impossible to determine which one is best. She has performed them all in a most satisfactory manner.

On the stage she is fearless and undertakes all the daring feats that a part demands. No fall or jump is avoided. In this connection might be mentioned her swing on the bell in "The Heart of Maryland"; her fall on the staircase in "The Great Diamond Robbery" and her horseback ride up a winding "run" onto a high and narrow platform in "Under Two Flags." In all three of these plays she was in real personal danger at every performance.

Off the stage Miss Lawrence is greatly interested in the work of the Actors' Church Alliance, and was instrumental in the forming of the association. She is often called upon to give her time and money to the work and is always ready to respond.

A great amount of work is occasioned by the demands of costume. All her costumes are personally selected and their preparation supervised by Miss Lawrence. If one considers the many changes necessary from week to week the importance of this detail will be appreciated.

Fortunately, Miss Lawrence is a "quick study," called upon almost every week to learn the "long part" of a play, it is wonderful that she can commit the lines in the short time available. The hours from nine to twelve, from one to five and from seven to eleven every day are spent in work at the theatre, and the long parts must be learned outside these hours or between the acts.

To keep her health under the great strain incidental to her work, Miss Lawrence is obliged to take great care of herself and avoids any excitement that is not in the nature of recreation, an occasional drive into the country or a short attendance at some social function being about all that she can undertake.

The programs printed in this book will refresh the memory of the reader and recall the excellent work performed by Miss Lawrence in the many plays in which she has appeared.

On the evening of Saturday, May 11, 1901, Miss Lawrence was tendered an ovation rarely equalled in the annals of the stage, the occasion being her last appearance before leaving for a much needed rest. "The house was packed as it never was before, hundreds of ladies standing in the aisles and corridors. When the final curtain fell, the uproar was deafening, and as the curtain rose, Miss Lawrence stood in the centre of the stage, surrounded by the members of the company. Then began a perfect fusillade of flowers from the orchestra, the balconies and the boxes, until the stage was literally covered with blossoms. These were gathered in a heap by the different people and placed at Miss Lawrence's feet. The orchestra struck up 'Auld Lang Syne' and the entire audience rose from their seats. It was a glowing tribute and brought tears to the eyes, not only of the actress honored, but to many others."

JANE IRVING.

Miss Irving, whose engagement with the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company has just closed, joined the company in August, 1902, and made her first appearance in the part of "Cynisca" in "Pygmalion and Galatea." Her work in the company has been marked by a very careful attention to details and has proved very satisfactory to the audience. As "Michlel" the gypsy girl, in "The Pride of Jennico," she reached absolute perfection and did much for the success of the piece. Miss Irving possesses a beautiful stage presence, being tall and remarkably graceful in her movements. Her voice is exquisitely modulated and she reads her lines with intelligence and great care. Although comparatively new in theatrical work she shows a natural dramatic ability that will undoubtedly bring her success in her profession.

MARY SANDERS

Miss Sanders was born in Boston, but her parents removed to Chicago when she was quite young and she was educated in the latter city. After graduating she went to New York and entered as a member of the Lyceum School of Acting, where she received a very thorough instruction in all branches of the art.

Miss Sanders has played with Helen Dauvray, Effie Ellsler, E. S. Willard, Richard Mansfield and others, besides playing four consecutive seasons in stock work in Washington. She made a starring tour in the fall of 1899, playing "Little Nell" and "The Marchioness," and after that, a season as "Ora" in Joseph Arthur's "Lost River."

Miss Sanders was one of the original members of the Castle Square Stock Company and has always been a great favorite with both the audience and the company. Although her regular work is in "ingénue" rôles she has many times played character parts and her low comedy parts have been eminently satisfactory. She is also often called upon to do "boys."

As an "ingénue" she is the personification of sweetness and naïveté. Of the many society plays produced during the past six years no recollection is more pleasant than the work of Miss Sanders. Her sunny personality shines through these characters and shows her own natural disposition.

In her character work her make-ups are very carefully studied and never fail to receive the applause of the house on her first entrance. She enters into the spirit of any part given her and strives to present the character as drawn by the author and always in a manner that brings out the effect needed to make the stage picture complete. Attractive in appearance, graceful and vivacious, her presence on the stage lights up all her scenes and gives great satisfaction to the audience. In her pathetic rôles she arouses the sympathy of the audience and she reaches all her situations with a naturalness that makes one entirely forget that she is only acting a part.

Miss Sanders gives careful attention to her costuming, all her gowns making an attractive setting for her beautiful face and figure.

LEONORA BRADLEY

Miss Bradley was born in London, but spent her childhood in New South Wales, Australia, where she was given a good education and had many advantages hardly to be expected in such a place. At that time she had no special inclination for the stage, but rather hoped to become a writer.

Returning to London she caught the stage fever and at the age of fifteen ran away to this country and obtained her first engagement in Baltimore, being given "first walking lady" parts although only a child.

Possessing a good voice, she next tried musical turns with a variety company and then took up burlesque, winning much success. Soon after she joined an opera company in which Francis Wilson played the principal parts and travelled with this organization to San Francisco, where she also sang "Little Buttercup" in "Pinafore." Miss Bradley next joined Jeanie Winston's Comic Opera Company, singing with great success in every opera that was brought out by the company.

Leaving opera she returned to drama and played engagements with Robson and Crane and John T. Raymond, and in 1892 came to the Boston Museum for an extended run of "By Proxy." Miss Bradley has also played with Helen Dauvray, E. H. Sothern, Margaret Mather and many other leading actors, playing leading parts in hundreds of plays.

Joining the Castle Square Theatre Company during the summer of 1899, she has been a very valuable member ever since.

Miss Bradley is one of the three ladies who are honorary members of the Theatrical Mechanics' Association of America.

Miss Bradley's work is marked by an intelligence that can come from great experience alone and in every part given her she shows herself to be a finished actress.

Her costumes are marvels of richness and beauty and show great taste in selection.

Besides her dramatic ability she possesses a knowledge of business affairs and successfully manages her various properties and investments.

MISS IZETTA JEWEL

Miss Jewel is of French and Spanish descent and, although a young woman, has had a very large experience in repertoire work, having played leading parts in most of the modern dramas. She is very well known throughout the South, where many of her early successes were attained.

She is pleasing to see and hear and is entirely free from the artificiality so often the fault of many more mature actresses. She catches at once the spirit of the parts she is called upon to interpret, and is exceedingly clever in her impersonations.

During the past year she has had many opportunities to show her worth and has proved herself an important member of a well-balanced company.

Perhaps there is no greater test of the ability of an actor than in the proper reading of Shakespearian lines. In the modern drama an actor of intelligence can get the sense of a part and in a trying situation improvise speeches that will prove satisfactory; not so with a blank verse part, every syllable of which is necessary to produce the effect designed by the author. Miss Jewel has shown a remarkable knowledge of Shakespeare's lines, and the following extract from the Boston Transcript of September 2, 1902, will give the opinion of a well-known dramatic critic of her work:

As You Like It.

Did space permit we should have more to say about the acting and especially about Miss Jewel, whose Celia was the gem of the performance. Here is a girl, apparently but just out of her teens, who shows that she has studied her Shakespeare and knows how to get the true value out of his lines. There was a charm about her playing that was most enjoyable, and while the average actor of to-day seems to have difficulty in understanding Shakespeare's words and giving them their full meaning, this girl reads the poet's beautiful speeches understandingly and never misses any of his fine meanings. The oldest playgoer will have to put on his thinking cap and recall many a Celia before he will find one that will equal her.

ALEXIA DURANT

Miss Durant is a Western girl and is now playing her first professional engagement. Born with a strong passion for the stage, she very early began the organization and direction of amateur clubs, both in operatic and dramatic work. She has sung such rôles as "Carmen," "Buttercup,"

"Red Riding Hood," "Prince Charming," etc., and played such leading parts as "Juliet," "Camille," "Portia," "Cigarette," "Rosalind," "Kate Hardcastle," "Lady Babbie," "Ophelia," etc., etc.

She has arranged and taught spectacular dances and drills.

Miss Durant's ambition is to acquire sufficient knowledge to undertake the direction of her own company, in which she will play leading parts.

Her amusements are horses, books and music. She also excels in all athletic exercises that women undertake. She is an accomplished fencer, swimmer and dancer.

Miss Durant attends all rehearsals of the company, whether or not in the bill, and frequently understudies many of the leading parts to be ready for any emergency that may arise.

While as yet she has had but few opportunities at the Castle Square Theatre to show her ability she has made the most of her parts and has been uniformly successful in what she has been called upon to do. She undertook at very short notice the leading part of "Henriette" in "The Two Orphans," when the principal cast for the part was taken ill, and for a number of performances played the rôle to the complete satisfaction of the audience.

Miss Durant is not afraid of any work in her chosen profession, and her industry must certainly bring about the realization of her ambition.

JOHN CRAIG

Mr. Craig was born in Mt. Pleasant, Tenn., but his parents moved to Texas when he was a year old, and his life up to his twentieth year was spent in ranching in Texas and Mexico. Resolving to become an actor he started for New York in search of a chance to get a trial, but without success.

He was obliged to go to work doing odd jobs, but never gave up his idea of becoming an actor. At last he was taken on as a super at one of the theatres, and from there went out with a "barnstorming" company playing anything and everything, and gaining no end of experience. His advance was rapid, for within three years he was a member of Mr. Daly's Company and remained with this manager seven years, touring not only this country, but also England, Ireland and Scotland. He joined Mr. Savage's Stock Company in Philadelphia in 1898 and, after a season with Mrs. Fiske, came to the Castle Square Theatre and made an immediate success. He has played new parts week after week and has been the leading man longer than all his predecessors together.

Mr. Craig's acting is uniformly good. He is what is technically known as a quick study and with an excellent figure and graceful stage presence is particularly well equipped for stock work.

Mr. Craig has played over three hundred characters, ranging from "Hamlet" to "Mr. Potter of Texas." He has made remarkable success in Shakespearian rôles even with the limited time allowed for preparation. As "Hamlet," "Shylock" and "Orlando" he did far better work than many who spend seasons in similar parts, and has borne up well under the great mental strain made necessary by the proper reading of Shakespeare's lines. In the modern comedy parts Mr. Craig is at his best.

Although his time would seem to be entirely filled at the theatre Mr. Craig enters into many outside business ventures, most of which prove successful. If he were not an actor of high order he would prove equally successful in the business world.

On the evening of Saturday, April 25, 1903, Mr. Craig made his farewell appearance at this theatre and the occasion was made a memorable one by his many friends. The house was packed to repletion and Mr. Craig in a brief speech thanked the audience for the great favor shown him. The house responded by wishing him good luck in his new venture.

Mr. Craig will star the coming season in "Prince Karl."

JOHN M. SAINPOLIS.

Mr. Sainpolis was born in New Orleans and received his education in the public schools of his native city, finishing with a course in college. The career mapped out for him was a commercial one, and his business life was spent in Chicago. The desire to go on the stage became too great and he joined a Frohman Company and played his first season in "The Charity Ball" and "Men and Women." Then followed engagements with Walker Whiteside and in stock companies in New York, Milwaukee, New Orleans and Montreal, playing "leads" in the latter city.

His line of parts before coming to the Castle Square Theatre covered nearly everything. This is usually the experience of an actor in stock companies. One week he is obliged to do light comedy work and the next week a romantic rôle or a negro character.

In the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company his regular work is "heavies" and from his first appearance with the company last September, when he played "Jack Negley" in "Barbara Frietchie," he has always made a distinct impression in every part given him. As "Daniel Groodge" in "Mankind" he was the bright and shining star, and his make-up and character work were especially commendable.

While on the stage he is obliged to be a villain, he is one of the most gentle of men in private life, and is an agreeable companion on all occasions. He has been added to the Castle Square golf contingent and occasionally on pleasant days, when out of the bill, he makes a trip to Franklin Park for an hour or two at the game.

Mr. Sainpolis is very popular with his associates, who thoroughly appreciate his many fine qualities, both as an actor and as a man. On the stage he is always ready to assist in working up a scene for the benefit of others, and this quality is considered to be most courteous in an actor.

JOHN T. CRAVEN

Mr. Craven was born in New York City, and caught the stage fever at a very early age. In August, 1865, he got his first engagement as an extra man in a pantomime at the Winter Garden Theatre, New York. His next work was with Barnum's Museum. Then followed a year's engagement as call-boy at the Old Bowery Theatre, under the management of George L. Fox, the famous clown.

Mr. Craven has had a very varied experience in all the phases of the theatrical profession, playing with such actors as Edwin Booth, Lawrence Barrett, Frank Mayo, Lotta, Mary Anderson, Ada Rehan, William Gillette and many others eminent in the profession. On September 17, 1877, Mr. Craven made his initial bow to a Boston audience as a member of the Boston Theatre Stock Company, playing the Negro in "Kit, the Arkansas Traveller," with Frank S. Chanfrau as "Kit." For eight years he remained with this company, and was seen in all the great productions put on during those years. In the fall of 1885 he went on the road, playing "Old Sport" in "A Rag Baby." Then came seasons with Maude Banks, Donnelly and Girard, N. C. Goodwin, Margaret Mather, Lydia Thompson, Julia Marlowe and others, closing with three years at Baltimore with the Lyceum Stock Company.

On April 30, 1900, Mr. Craven joined the Castle Square Theatre Company, and has played the leading comedy parts ever since. It is useless to attempt to make any comparisons of the various parts played by him during the past three years; they all show the result of his vast experience with the old school actors, whose work has never been surpassed. In every character his work is finished, and leaves nothing to be desired by the audience. His make-ups are always good, and his costumes in character parts are extremely artistic.

JAMES L. SEELEY

Mr. Seeley is a native of Rushville, Illinois, and has been a member of the company since the summer of 1897. He has proved himself a very valuable man, being capable of filling any position in a stock company. His work is always marked by a consistency and conscientiousness that win immediate favor from an audience. Although a young man he has had a very great experience as an actor, having played in almost every State of the Union. In many plays he has done nearly every character in the cast.

Before going on the stage Mr. Seeley was engaged in the railroad business, holding an important position with the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy Railroad Company. He was very popular with his business associates, who never fail to call on him when their business or pleasure leads them to Boston.

In his position in the Castle Square Stock Company Mr. Seeley is called upon to do "old man," but he has shown to great advantage in leading, heavy and character parts. His portrayal of "Pudd'nhead Wilson" will be remembered by all who had the pleasure of seeing him in that part. Being an ardent admirer of "Mark Twain" he endeavored to make a careful study of the character and his success was the result of thoughtful preparation.

When called upon to do the part of "Abraham Lincoln" in "The Ensign," although not being obliged to speak a single word on the stage, he spent two hours before each performance in "making up" for the half minute's appearance necessary.

As "Roustan" in "More than Queen" he made a hit that was recognized by the critics to be unequalled in the part.

Mr. Seeley enjoys golfing and in the season his spare time is spent in "following the ball," his matches with Mr. Wade affording much pleasure for the other members of the company, as well as for the participants.

The few weeks of vacation time each year are spent with his family at his summer home at Atlantic City.

Mr. Seeley is a man of positive ideas and his earnestness of manner is a strong characteristic of his make-up. Whatever business he has in hand is attended to with a thoroughness that is bound to win.

Mrs. Seeley is occasionally seen on the Castle Square Theatre stage under the name of Jennie Kendrick.

Mr. Seeley's continuous service with the company is only exceeded in length by Mr. Morison's.

THOMAS MacLARNIE

Mr. MacLarnie joined the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company in August, 1902, during the production of "Ours," and from the very start has been popular with the audience.

His first theatrical engagement was with James O'Neill in "Monte Cristo" and "Virginius." Among other engagements he has played with Lewis Morrison, Frederick Warde, Augustus Pitou, Jacob Litt, Henry Miller, Chas. E. Blaney and J. Wesley Rosenquest.

The first part he ever played was an old man, and he has been growing steadily younger ever since. The parts he has played have covered the entire gamut of stage characters. His voice possesses a remarkably musical quality that engages the attention of the audience at once and makes it a pleasure to hear him speak.

His work in the company during the present season is well known to all the patrons of the house, but a mention of a few of his parts may be favorably received. As "Horatio Drake" in "The Christian" his work was highly commended by the Boston press as a highly finished performance. As "Clarence Douglass" in "A Young Wife" he was manly and forceful, and never spoiled the part by over-zeal. As "Lieut. John Perry Allen" in "The Ensign" he showed a most satisfactory repose of manner and dignity.

In all his work Mr. MacLarnie makes a fascinating character of whatever part he has in hand, and his scenes are always appreciated by the audience.

Mr. MacLarnie carries the same dignity into his private life that marks him on the stage; in fact, the work he is usually called upon to do is but the reflection of his own self.

GEORGE E. MACK

Mr. Mack began life with a Boston commercial house in a way which promised a successful future. His desire to go on the stage was so great that he gave up a very lucrative position and has since been doing theatrical work.

Mr. Mack's experience has been varied, beginning years ago here in Boston as a public reader and impersonator. His first dramatic experience was in support of John E. Hanshaw. He was Mr. Hanshaw's "side partner" and their drolleries were applauded from coast to coast, Mr. Mack's exquisitely funny make-up and facial expression standing him in good stead. One year each with "Hands Across the Sea," "The Ensign" and "The Derby Mascot" followed, proving him versatile as he played light comedy, juvenile business and boys. For the next two years he appeared in stock work in Albany, Halifax and Montreal. He next undertook comic opera for a while, leaving that work to play the title part in "My Friend from India," appearing in this part at the Grand Opera House in this city. For two seasons he played "Hi Holler," the quaintly amusing country bumpkin in "Way Down East."

For the past season he has been the light comedian in the Castle Square Theatre Company and has proved a successful member of the organization. He numbers many friends and admirers among the theatre-goers of Boston.

EDWARD WADE

Mr. Wade was born in Chelsea, and made his début as an actor March 9, 1889, as a member of the Old Museum Company. After spending a few years on the road he joined this organization in April, 1899, and has been a valuable member ever since.

While on the road Mr. Wade played with James J. Corbett in "Gentleman Jack"; with Lewis Morrison in "Faust," and with Marie Wainwright. He was a member of the Grand Opera House Stock Company in 1893.

With the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company he is called upon for a great variety of parts and has always proved adequate. It is a severe task to be obliged to play heavy parts one week and light comedy the next, but in a stock company one must take what is given and make the most of it. Mr. Wade has shown his usefulness in many ways and has been ready for all emergencies. Mr. Wade is the champion golf player of the company and spends all his spare time on some near-by course. At this sport he never tires. At tennis he is no mean adversary. In fact he excels in any game of an athletic nature.

Mr. Wade is married and has a pleasant home in Arlington. His wife is often seen on the Castle Square Theatre stage under the name of Cordelia Macdonald. Miss Macdonald's picture appears on another page.

LINDSAY MORISON

Mr. Morison is a native of England. In point of service he is by a year the oldest member of the company, having sung in the opera company before drama was put on. He sang the part of "Lord Allcash" in "Fra Diavolo" and "The Mikado" in "Mikado," and was always in the cast during the last year of opera at the Castle Square Theatre. He possesses a fine singing voice, and had always worked in opera before the dramatic company was formed.

His dramatic work has been enjoyed during the past six years. He has been called upon to do a great variety of parts, although character work is his regular line. He takes great care in his make-ups, and even in his smallest parts he gets out all there is in them. He shows at all times the great practical stage training his experience has given him, and is very careful of all the details of stage business. Having at his command all the various English dialects, he has proved of great value in the many plays of British origin, now in the repertoires of American stock companies, that have been produced at the Castle Square Theatre.

His "Captain Redwood" in "Jim the Penman" was a careful piece of acting, and will be remembered by all the patrons of the house who attended those performances.

In the extremely difficult part of "The Ghost" in "Hamlet" Mr. Morison was completely successful; a part in which many well-known actors have failed, and to which the tradition of the stage has always assigned only the most experienced.

His "Col. Moberly" in "Alabama" was a very successful piece of acting.

Mr. Morison is one of the golfers of the company, and is ready to "go around" in all kinds of weather.

His name is familiar on all programs of entertainments given for charitable purposes, and he does his best to help along any good cause.

A "good fellow" always, he is ready for any enjoyment or work that is on foot, and may be counted upon as a comrade in any undertaking. His keen sense of humor makes him a charming companion at all times.

LOUIS THIEL

Mr. Thiel before coming to the Castle Square Theatre played with many different travelling and stock companies, among which were The Wife for Wife Company, New Dominion Company, Humanity Company, Blue Jeans Company and Lost in the Desert Company. His principal work is in comedy and characters, being unusually successful in negro and dialect parts. As "Uncle Poly" in "The New Dominion" he "was far above the average as a colored man and was deserving of all the applause he received." One of his best character parts was that of a tramp in "Side Tracked" and proved a bit of mimicry that would be hard to duplicate. In the play the humorous side of tramp life is shown, and, as is told by the title, he is side-tracked while trying to beat his way on a freight car, and while thus detained he becomes a prominent feature in a tragedy.

When "Quo Vadis" was put on Mr. Thiel was specially engaged to do the part of "Nero," and all who saw the piece have a vivid recollection of his work in that character. He received great commendation from the critics at that time as being fully in the spirit of the play and era. Mr. Thiel is almost always in the cast, and although not usually called upon for principal parts he makes the most of his opportunities and gives satisfaction at all times. As "Manasses Marks" in "Humanity" he made a hit, playing the part in an amusing manner. Mr. Thiel is a pigeon fancier of some reputation and enjoys the study and care of these familiar birds.

WILLIAM J. HASSON

Mr. Hasson was born in Boston and was educated here, graduating from Boston College with the degree of A. B. in 1896. While in college he was greatly interested in theatricals, and was prominent in all the performances given there. After graduating he took up civil engineering, and for three years worked hard at his chosen profession, but his taste for the stage was too great to be overcome, and he resolved to become a player as soon as possible.

Mr. Hasson made up his mind to become a member of the Castle Square Company, believing that the experience gained there would be more valuable than from seasons spent on the road playing the same part. He finally succeeded in getting an opportunity in August, 1899, in "Arrah-na-Pogue." While he had nothing to say, he was at least on the stage. His first speaking part was two lines long, in "The Sporting Duchess." After this he played a number of small parts, but was not yet a regular member of the company. During the run of "The Bells of Haslemere" Mr. Cummings was taken suddenly ill, and Mr. Hasson was called on to take his place without a rehearsal, getting through the performance without missing a cue. Three months later he was made a regular member. While usually playing minor parts, he never fails to give them a careful attention that is often neglected by actors of greater experience.

Mr. Hasson's work is greatly appreciated by the patrons of the theatre, and is certain to bring him the success that it merits.

JOHN J. GEARY

Mr. Geary's principal work is as assistant stage manager. To him is intrusted the running of the performances. He sits at his desk near the left first entrance and from there directs the progress of the play. For an hour before the curtain is rung up he sounds quarter-hour bells in all the dressing-rooms and the green-room. He notifies the orchestra by a signal light when the performers are ready and attends to all the details on the stage. The scenery is set and struck under his direction and his supervision is over all the properties. All the business off the stage is regulated by him and is performed at his command. While the play is going on he holds the book and stands ready to prompt when needed. He sees that the actors are ready to make their entrances at the proper time and rings the curtain down when the scene is ended.

Besides all this work he is often called upon to do a part in the piece and never fails to get the most out of what is given to him. In his character work he shows great skill and is always satisfactory to the audience.

Mr. Geary is often obliged to jump into a part at short notice on account of accident or illness of some of the principals and at these times he shows his great value to the company. For example, in "Northern Lights," Mr. Humphrey, who was playing the part of "Sidney Sherwood," was taken ill; on a notice of three hours Mr. Geary took the part, read the lines at the matinee performance, was letter perfect in the evening and received a curtain call at every performance afterward.

The importance of his regular work, while not fully appreciated from the front, is very vital to the production. He has held this position from the first performance in 1897 and has proved a valuable assistant to Mr. Pitman. He is a quiet and estimable gentleman off the stage, giving one an impression of his great reliability.

MARY HALL

During the summer of 1902 the management were at a loss to get a leading lady. Miss Shannon had taken another engagement and no one could be found to take up the work immediately. From New York came the word that an English actress had just arrived in this country and was ready for an engagement. Without knowing her ability, the management was obliged to take a chance, and Miss Hall was engaged. She was unknown to any of the company, and her advent was looked on with some misgivings. She arrived in Boston and made her first appearance at Music Hall during the production of "The Lost Paradise" and immediately made an impression in her favor that increased rapidly until the close of the summer season, when she was obliged to make way for the return of the Castle Square Theatre favorite, Miss Lawrence.

Although Miss Hall was represented as an English actress, it appeared that she was born in America, and had been playing engagements in London that had kept her busy and could have been renewed as long as she desired. A longing for her old home prompted her return to America, where she arrived just in time to prove of great service to the Castle Square Theatre management and assist in the pleasure of the patrons of the theatre.

Her remarkable beauty and girlish grace in itself would have brought her success, but coupled with her personal attractions was a dramatic ability of high order.

As "Juliet" she showed skill and a charm of manner positively refreshing, besides reading Shakespeare's lines in a most intelligent manner. The critics were unanimous in her praise and believed a new star had been discovered.

In the part of "Galatea" her beauty was shown to its best advantage in the classical robes of ancient Greece.

On leaving the company Miss Hall secured an engagement at once in another stock company and her complete success in her profession is assured. While in the company she was seen in "The Lost Paradise," "She Stoops to Conquer," "Dora," "Romeo and Juliet," "Engaged," "The Fool's Revenge," "Ours," and "Pygmalion and Galatea."

It is safe to predict that Miss Hall will be seen at no far distant day as a star in plays specially arranged for her splendid attainments.

LAVINIA SHANNON

Miss Shannon joined the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company the week of April 28, 1902, during the production of "Tennessee's Pardner," in which she played the part of "Tennessee." She stayed with the company till June 21st, and was seen in eight plays just before the company moved to Music Hall. Had it been possible for her to have remained longer with the company she would have proved an important member, as she possesses a dramatic experience of great value and an ability of note.

Miss Shannon has an attractive stage presence, her beauty of feature being enhanced by an almost perfect figure.

From a very early age her life has been spent in acting, and she has appeared in some of the best companies in the United States. In private life Miss Shannon is the wife of Mr. Giles Shine, who at one time played the comedy business in the Castle Square Theatre Company, and whose picture appears in this book.

As "Parthenia" in "Ingomar" she made a most beautiful appearance, wearing the Greek costume with good effect. As "Tennessee," the mountain girl, her work was strong and vigorous.

Since leaving the company she has appeared several times in Boston, and is always received with great kindness by her audiences.

EVA TAYLOR

Miss Taylor was born in Paterson, N., J. and as a child recited, played the piano and sang at entertainments. When she was twelve years of age she had seven pupils, to whom she was teaching music. For a long time there was a question whether she should give her attention to music or the stage. Finally choosing the stage for her career, she was given an opportunity with William H. Crane, and next with Richard Mansfield.

Miss Taylor was the leading lady of a stock company in Milwaukee when she was engaged temporarily to take Miss Lawrence's place with the Castle Square Theatre Company. Her work proved so satisfactory during the first few weeks that she was permanently engaged, and during her sojourn in Boston she made many friends among the regular patrons of the Castle Square Theatre.

It was a trying ordeal indeed to follow in the footsteps of a remarkable favorite, for she was obliged to overcome prejudice, sentiment and long established precedents. In the second play of her engagement, "The Duel of Hearts," she was given the part of "Lady Anita Stanhope," and her success was instantaneous and lasting.

Miss Taylor possesses a command of dramatic resources that make her an ideal member for a stock company. Her light comedy work is charming and her treatment of strong dramatic situations remarkably effective, besides being an emotional actress of great ability.

In the part of "Roxy," in "Pudd'nhead Wilson," Miss Taylor probably reached her greatest success while with the Castle Square Theatre Company. "In dialect, in gait, in mannerisms, she was a vivid portraiture of the woman whose one-sixteenth part of colored blood had damned her beyond hope."

GRACE ATWELL

Miss Atwell is an old Boston favorite, having been a member of the Boston Museum Stock Company, and also connected with many companies made up of Boston and metropolitan actors of note. She has played many parts outside of her regular work of leading lady, and always secures the praise of her audience for her conscientious and careful attention to all the details of the business.

Miss Atwell has appeared with the company at various times for short seasons, and her return is always welcomed. During the second season of the company she was regularly engaged, and played a number of parts with complete satisfaction. As "Mrs. Errol" in "Little Lord Fauntleroy" she is seen in a part admirably fitted to her. She has been secured by Mr. Craig for his leading lady during the present season of that popular actor's starring tour in "Prince Karl," and her presence will strengthen his company.

Miss Atwell is a resident of Boston, and her charming personality has won her hosts of friends off as well as on the stage.

MAYE LOUISE AIGEN

Miss Aigen was born in Boston. She was educated at the Franklin School, from which she graduated, and at the Notre Dame Academy. Her first appearance on the stage was made at Rockland, Maine, as "Meenie" in "Rip Van Winkle," when she was five years old.

After leaving school her first engagement was with Mrs. Thomas Barry and William Redmond in "The Midnight Marriage." Next she played ingénue rôles with the late John T. Raymond. When "The Octoroon" was played in spectacular manner at the Boston Theatre in April, 1887, Miss Aigen played the part of "Zoe."

For several seasons Miss Aigen played with stock companies and on the road in heavy rôles, and the experience gained in these companies has proved of great value. Miss Aigen joined the Castle Square Theatre Company on May 13, 1901, and for a year she played the "heavy parts" whenever there was such a character in the bill, at other times being obliged to do comedy and character work. At all times she showed her ability and experience by a careful and consistent portrayal of her characters. Her lines were always read with intelligence and rare dramatic effect.

MAUDE ODELL

Miss Odell joined the company in January, 1898, making her first appearance as "Antoinette de Mauban," in "The Prisoner of Zenda." Her personal appearance and dramatic ability made her a favorite at once, and as long as she remained with the company she was held in high esteem by the patrons of the house. Miss Odell is a Southern girl, born in Beaufort, a small town upon an island in South Carolina, and her first stage work was with E. H. Sothorn in "The Maister of Woodbarrow." In her early childhood days she was the leader of the amateurs of her acquaintance and figured in those well-remembered tableaux as "Pocahontas" and "Minnehaha" because she was dark and had such an abundance of dark tresses. Her early education was gained in a convent. She came to Boston and pursued her musical studies at the New England Conservatory of Music.

After a short time in small parts she was engaged to play "Helen Truman" in "The Wife," then with the Lyceum Stock Company productions of "The Prisoner of Zenda," "First Gentleman of Europe," "The Wife of Wiloughby" and "The Amazons."

At the Castle Square Theatre as "Antoinette de Mauban" she carried the part with ease and went through the stronger passages with fine intensity and finish. As "Lady de Winter" in "The Three Musketeers" Miss Odell was at her best, for it is a part that fits her like a glove, and she took full advantage of the many opportunities it offered to show her talents.

Since leaving Boston Miss Odell has played many of her best parts and she has also sung successfully the prima donna rôles in opera, her work being very favorably reported.

CORONA RICCARDO.

Miss Riccardo was born in Naples, of Roman parents, and her childhood was spent in the convents of Southern France. She was anxious to become a great singer and early began the study of grand opera, but gave up the idea and undertook a dramatic career. She possesses a wealth of physical perfection that shows her Southern birth — tall and graceful, with a beautiful voice that shows a faint trace of foreign accent giving a liquid softness without marring. Beside this exceptional physical endowment, she has a splendid intelligence and a fine dramatic art.

Her first appearance in America was in New York with Wilson Barrett. Afterwards she was Robert Mantell's chief supporter, playing such rôles as "Juliet," "Desdemona" and "Ophelia." She was secured by Augustin Daly for the "Countess Mirza" in the original production of "The Great Ruby" and created a sensation in the part.

Her first part at the Castle Square Theatre was as "Countess Mirza" and is well remembered for its strong emotional qualities. As "Louise" in "Frou Frou" the Boston Transcript says of her: "Miss Riccardo was a positive pleasure. Not only does her brilliant dark beauty prove an excellent foil to the light-haired Gilberte, but the exquisite charm of her manners, the mobility and expressiveness of her face and the musical tones of her well modulated voice all combine to make her 'Louise' a character not soon to be forgotten."

As "Princess Venetia Corona" in "Under Two Flags" she charmed her audience by a thoroughly artistic impersonation and added an important element in the success of the piece.

Miss Riccardo was not long with the company, but the few parts played were greatly appreciated.

NINA MORRIS

Miss Morris was the original "heavy woman" of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company, and played during the first season. She left the company for a while to engage elsewhere and then returned for a second period.

Tall, dark, and of a fine figure, she looked the parts she was called upon to portray, and with fine dramatic skill she read her lines and acted her characters. Full of southern fire and emotion, her work on the stage gave an effectiveness to her scenes truly magnificent. Her striking face and figure played no small part in winning her success.

In her character work, probably the best part she played while with the company was in "The Great Diamond Robbery" as "Frau Rosenbaum." The newspaper report of that week was as follows :

"In this rôle Miss Morris does some of the best work of her career in the Castle Square Stock Company. Her mannerisms of voice and feature are relegated entirely to the background, and she succeeds in creating a complete illusion. In the scene in the fifth act where the notorious old hag allows all the ferocity of her evil nature to assert itself, Miss Morris acted with splendid force, unmarred by rant or exaggeration, and in the quieter scenes she was natural and thoroughly effective."

Miss Morris is often seen in Boston with companies of national reputation.

ADELAIDE CUSHMAN

Miss Cushman was the second regularly engaged "heavy woman" of the Castle Square Theatre Company following Miss Morris' first engagement. She is a type of brunette beauty which seems to go with such parts as fall to her regular line of business.

Possessing dramatic fire to a wonderful degree, her success in her chosen profession would have been very great had not illness made it impossible for her to continue. She was obliged to retire from the stage some time ago and has not since returned to round out a career commenced with signs of great promise.

While with the company she was cast in a number of plays and her heavy work was startling by its force and depth.

As "Martha" in "Little Em'ly" she carried the house by storm and the line in the play, "The mould of the churchyard don't hold any that folks shrink away from more," was the key-note of her performance.

Among other productions she appeared in "The Wife," "Sweet Lavender," "Shenandoah," "Captain Swift," "The Fatal Card," and "Charley's Aunt." As "Lucille Ferrant" in "The Wife," produced at the beginning of the second season, she was very effective in the make-up and lines of the Creole adventuress.

She was followed in the company by Miss Odell.

KATHERINE CLINTON

Miss Clinton joined the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company the first of June, 1902, and played through the summer, most of her work being done at Music Hall. While not necessary from a theatrical point of view, the "heavy women" at the Castle Square Theatre have nearly always been decided brunettes, and Miss Clinton was no exception to the rule. Somewhat petite, she carried into her work a vivacity and strenuousness that was very effective in her various parts. It was her fortune to be obliged to do most of her parts while with the company outside of her regular line, but she was equally satisfactory in comedy or character work. As "Lydia Languish" in "The Rivals" she is perhaps remembered as doing extremely well in a very famous character, played, as it has been, by many of the old-time actors and filled with the traditions of the stage.

MARY YOUNG

Miss Young began her professional career almost from infancy. It is said that actors and actresses are born, not made. Miss Young is no exception to the rule.

When she was but four years of age her graceful beauty, unusual in a child, drew the attention of Professor Marwig, the famous teacher of dancing in New York, and from her parents he secured her services in the "Princess Carnivals," which he gave annually in New York, Newport and Narragansett. Every year she was engaged for the leading part in these carnivals up to the time she was twelve years old, and all the while she was studying the Delsartian methods and acquiring new steps and terpsichorean movement.

The late Augustin Daly saw Miss Young at one of these entertainments and that astute manager at once saw possibilities in the child.

For three years Miss Young studied with Mr. Daly, never for a moment outside the watchful care of her mother, and then when the famous production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" was given, Miss Young was assigned the rôle of "Titania."

For some time she played "Titania," and then was cast for "Puck," and there is a tradition on the stage to-day that her performance of this character has never since been equalled. Miss Young was now a regular member of Mr. Daly's exclusive organization. On the 17th of March, 1892, Tennyson's play of "The Foresters" was read to the members, and on this day she first met her husband, John Craig, who had joined Mr. Daly's forces.

Some time after the company went to England, and on the 17th of March, 1894, in the quaint old church of St. Giles-in-the-Field, in London, Mary Young became Mrs. John Craig.

She remained with Mr. Daly for eight years, and then did stock work with Wagenhals and Kempler. She was for a time with George W. Lederer and Charles Frohman, and has played during her professional life in all the large cities of the country.

Some three years ago she was a member of the Castle Square Company for one season, but since that time she has remained off the stage. She is an accomplished dancer, is the possessor of a good singing voice and, from her tutelage with Mr. Daly, has learned more of the histrionic art than many actresses of to-day can boast.

MARIAN CHAPMAN

Miss Chapman was born in Baltimore and is connected with one of the oldest and best families in that historic Southern city. The old saying that Baltimore girls are the most beautiful in the country has no exception in the case of Miss Chapman. After a high school education she decided to take up the stage for the career of her life and joined the Empire School of Acting of New York. Her advancement was rapid and she was soon engaged with Frank Perley to play "Mary Alymer" in "The Sporting Duchess." She was next cast as "Flora Campbell" in "Beside the Bonnie Briar Bush," making the hit of the piece. It was while playing in "The Sporting Duchess" that the management of the Castle Square Theatre saw her clever work and engaged her for the Stock Company, which she joined in May, 1898.

Miss Chapman is a hard-working, conscientious, studious player, and her whole life is wrapped up in her work. Her remarkable resemblance to Julia Marlowe has been noticed and commented upon.

Few actresses are wholly acceptable in boy's attire, which is apt to display rather than disguise their femininity, but Miss Chapman is fortunate in this respect and her boys are really boyish.

While at the Castle Square Theatre Miss Chapman's work was most acceptable. She was always ready for any emergency, as will be recalled when during the run of "The Little Minister" she took Miss Lawrence's part of "Babbie" at short notice, the leading lady having sprained her ankle during the second week of the play.

On leaving this company she was engaged to play a principal part in "The Village Postmaster." She has since been seen in "Quincy Adams Sawyer" and other productions.

Miss Chapman is successful in always getting good engagements with no intervals between. Her future is full of promise.

FANNY ADDISON PITT

Mrs. Pitt has played a number of engagements with the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company, the longest of which was during the summer of 1902, most of the time being spent at Music Hall. She is one of the most versatile actresses of the old school and has a national reputation in many of her parts. The picture accompanying this sketch was taken in one of her most famous characters, "Mrs. Malaprop" in "The Rivals," a part in which she has no superior.

Many years of experience playing a long list of characters have given Mrs. Pitt a finish in her work that is the envy of the younger generation. From her first entrance till her exit every detail of her acting has a finish that marks the master hand.

In the old comedies long since become classics in English literature she is particularly fascinating on account of the purity of the atmosphere surrounding her characters. The person represented seems to have stepped out of the book and on to the stage. Her work alone is sufficient to carry the performance. Engaged with the Castle Square Theatre Company to do "old women," she gave full measure of satisfaction and her work while here was always pleasurable in the extreme. In her "character old women," such as "La Frochard" in "The Two Orphans" and "Sheelah" in "The Colleen Bawn," she entered into the spirit of the part and no opportunity was neglected to make a thorough and consistent character.

Mrs. Pitt belongs in Boston and when not engaged in her professional duties is the centre of much social activity.

LIZZIE MORGAN

Miss Elizabeth Morgan was born in Sydney, N. S. W., and made her first appearance in support of Mme. Celeste, a great artist. She was chosen for her double in "Like and Unlike." The engagement was considered an honor for a girl but sixteen years old. She played in support of many stars, working her way upward until she held the position of leading woman.

Her first appearance in America was in a company managed by her sister, Fanny Morgan Phelps, which played at Victoria, Portland, Ore., and Puget Sound. In this company was Mr. James O. Barrow, who for a time was comedian at the Castle Square Theatre. After two years in America she returned to Australia, carrying with her many ballads that she knew would be novelties in that country. She stopped at New Zealand and signed an engagement, opening in "School," in which she introduced some of her songs, which became very popular. While in New Zealand she supported many stars touring in that country, including Charles Wheatley, the Linyards, Mrs. Scott-Siddons and J. K. Emmett. She played in New Zealand Shakespearian comedy, burlesque and melodrama.

Miss Morgan came to this country a second time and played engagements on the Pacific Coast, and finally came East, playing in Mr. Brady's companies.

She was an original member of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company, and was very popular during her two years' stay. Her work covered a wide range of parts, from the stately dowager in the society drama to the "old woman" in melodrama. Her years of experience showed their value in all her work, and a glance at the programs of the plays in which she appeared will show better than any words her great versatility, as in all her parts she was successful. Her make-ups in character work will be recalled by the patrons of the house who were fortunate enough to have seen her in the early days of the company.

Miss Morgan is still playing important engagements.

LEONORA GNITO

Miss Gnito made her first appearance at the Castle Square Theatre in the old opera days, singing principal parts in a number of operas. She early began the study of music, intending to make it her business. After singing in a number of companies came a short season without an engagement, and she tried dramatic work. It proving to be an interesting venture, she continued in that business and became very successful in the line of parts entrusted to her. Miss Gnito has a remarkable aptitude for hard work, and never was better suited than when given a long, hard part to prepare at short notice.

She considered her Castle Square Theatre experience a school in which she was learning in a thorough manner all that was necessary for her to know. While here she tried hard to please, and received much praise for the excellence of her work.

It was her lot to do a great number of second parts, and in these she tried to do all she could to help emphasize the situations of the leading part.

By her personality and the force of her work her presence was felt at all times, and when she left the company it was with the regrets of all on both sides of the curtain.

JENNIE KENDRICK

Miss Kendrick was born in Illinois, not far from the town where her husband, Mr. James L. Seeley, was born. She comes from a Southern family of note, although her original American ancestor settled in Boston in 1623. She received her early education in her native town, and after graduation taught school for a few years. She also was the society reporter for a Quincy, Ill., newspaper, and wrote articles for the Toledo Blade.

Her first appearance on the stage was as "Valentine" in "A Celebrated Case" with the old-time actor, Horace Herbert. Her first Eastern engagement was with Sam Ryan and Lottie Gilson, whom she left to join Murray & Mack in Irish comedies. She next signed with Frohman's "Jane" company. Just before coming to Boston she was with Ethel Tucker in a travelling stock company. She has played "leads," "heavies," "characters" and "soubrettes."

Miss Kendrick has played over two hundred parts of all kinds, and is a valuable member for a stock company. She is rarely seen on the Castle Square Theatre stage, but whenever needed is always pleasantly received by the audience.

Her time is spent in social duties and in assisting her husband in his work. She is vice-president of the Actors' Church Alliance, and gives a great deal of time to that work, being always on the executive committee in all their undertakings. Her scrap-books of stage articles are marvels of completeness, and are the result of an immense amount of work. She possesses a collection of photographs and autographs of stage celebrities probably unequalled.

CORDELIA MACDONALD.

Miss Macdonald is occasionally seen on the Castle Square Theatre stage and her appearance is always welcomed by a large number of friends. Although a young woman she has had considerable experience in dramatic work, and whenever in the bill her parts are always carefully performed.

She has played with James O'Neill in "Monte Cristo," "Virginius," and "Richelieu," making a tour of the country with that famous actor. For three seasons she was with Lewis Morrison, playing principal parts in all the large cities. Miss Macdonald was also in stock work in Providence. Just before coming to the Castle Square Theatre she spent some weeks on the road in a company playing "What Happened to Jones." In the same company as leading man was Howard Hansel, who has been engaged for leading business with the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company. A few years ago she played a short engagement with J. H. Gilmour at the Tremont Theatre.

Miss Macdonald was born in Boston, and her father is a player of some note, although not on the stage at the present time. Her aunt for whom she was named was the original "Little Eva" in "Uncle Tom's Cabin."

Miss Macdonald is tall and stately and of very great beauty. Most of the parts she has played at the Castle Square Theatre have been characters in which her personal charms have shown to the best advantage.

Miss Macdonald is the wife of Mr. Wade, of this company and has a very beautiful home at Arlington. Her social duties are very many, but she finds time to be of great help in the work of the Actors' Church Alliance and is always on their working committees.

ROSE MORISON

Miss Morison was one of the original members of the company and during the first years of the organization was seen in most of the plays. She came from Washington, where she was born, and is the sister of the late Mr. Cummings, and the wife of Mr. Morison, who is still in the company.

Miss Morison was in the old opera company with her husband, and while she is not now a regular member, she is considered to be one of the family. She is not at present engaged in any theatrical work, finding her duties at home sufficient to keep her busy. She is of great help to her husband in his work, and is occasionally seen on the Castle Square Theatre stage when emergencies arise or a number of extra people are needed.

Miss Morison has done a large number of parts, both "straight" and in character. She is favorably recalled as "Mrs. Micawber" in "Little Em'ly." In that play she was very fortunate in her make-up, carefully following the famous picture of Cruikshank.

All her work in the company has been satisfactory from every point of view. Her personal attractions are of a striking quality, being a decided blonde and somewhat above the average height of figure.

J. H. GILMOUR

Mr. Gilmour was the original "leading man" of the Castle Square Stock Company and his excellent work will long be remembered. A master of the dramatic art, no character was ever poorly played by him. In the early days of the company his great experience proved invaluable and it was for fortunate indeed that the leading parts fell to such a competent actor. He did much towards the accomplishment of the success that crowned the efforts of the company from the very start.

Mr. Gilmour's great knowledge of dramatic art was shown at its best when he adapted for stage production Mr. Ticknor's excellent translation of Rostand's "Cyrano de Bergerac." This was done in a very short time and with Mr. Gilmour in the title rôle proved to be as successful as any American stage production of the celebrated poem.

Mr. Gilmour was the original "Earl of Dorincourt" in "Little Lord Fauntleroy," and his conception and make-up have always been the standard for other actors who have played the part.

In all romantic rôles he showed a dash and spirit that gave an atmosphere of realism to the stage heroes so necessary to the success of such plays. His "Rudolph" in "The Prisoner of Zenda" was one of his many delightful characters in that class of plays. He was at his best, however, in the many society plays produced during the first two years of the company's existence.

Time and the Hour aptly says, "Mr. Gilmour, among the younger players, is almost the typical realizer of genuine polite elegance on the stage. The Gilmour 'Earl of Dorincourt' must always remain a classic memory of ingrained patrician feeling. Throughout all Mr. Gilmour's characters ran this note of fineness. His smooth tripping eloquence at times tinkled like a music-box among the horns of Wagner."

WILLIAM COURTLEIGH

Mr. Courtleigh is a young man who is an American citizen by right of good sense. He was born in Canada, but after becoming one of our actors he concluded to become one of us, and the law made him an American. Personally there is an impression of reliability about him that ought to make him a favorite, and this has been the case so far in his career.

After his college days were over he began the study of law and it was while busy at this that he became inoculated with stage fever. He found his talent for this sort of work by an indulgence in amateur theatricals and so he threw law to the winds and went on the stage. He gained his first experience by barn-storming and although he does not care to repeat it he knows that he owes something good to it.

Mr. Courtleigh's early career was through the West in small companies. His first important engagement was with Fanny Davenport in "Cleopatra," in which he played "Demetrius." During the same season he played juvenile parts in "Fedora" and "La Tosca."

Mr. Courtleigh is a very versatile actor, having played the heavy part in "Michael Strogoff" leads with Helen Dauvray, romantic parts with Margaret Mather, juveniles and characters. He is capable of brilliant work and makes any part he assumes noteworthy.

While at the Castle Square Theatre during the summer of 1899 he became very popular with both the patrons of the house and the company. He was seen in a dozen plays and his work was invariably of a very high order.

During the past four years he has played leading parts in many of the great productions and also in support of the eminent stars of the day.

His genial disposition and kindness of manner are apparent on a first acquaintance and grow upon one continually. He has all the qualities of a romantic actor developed to perfection.

FRANKLYN RITCHIE

Mr. Ritchie played a short engagement as leading man of the company during the summer of 1900, while Mr. Craig was taking a needed rest.

While his opportunities here were few, he made the most of them, and played his parts with the quiet dignity that he has always shown elsewhere. He made a distinct success as "Willie Loveall" in "The Man from Mexico." He also played in "The Late Mr. Castello," and "A Fool of Fortune."

FRANK SHERIDAN

Mr. Sheridan played a few weeks' engagement during the summer of 1899, and his manly way of doing his parts was much enjoyed by the patrons of the house. His earnest work as the minister in "A Temperance Town" marked him as a conscientious, painstaking actor. His gentlemanly bearing at all times made him popular with the members of the company. The few parts played by Mr. Sheridan were favorably received by the audience, and the public press gave him very complimentary criticisms of all his work, making special mention of his fine figure and pleasing voice. Mr. Sheridan returned to the theatre the summer of 1900 and played during the long run of "A Temperance Town," and was heartily welcomed on his appearance in the same part taken by him a year before.

HALLETT THOMPSON

Mr. Thompson was engaged for the summer season of 1902 to take Mr. Craig's place, while that gentleman was taking his customary vacation. He played a few weeks at the Castle Square Theatre, and went with the company to Music Hall. His manly appearance, and the quality of his work, won for him the applause of the large audiences which attended the performances last summer. He divided honors with Miss Hall on all occasions. Mr. Thompson pays strict attention to his work, giving it the same careful attention that any good business man gives to the work that brings him his living.

A glance at the programs of the summer season of 1902 will show at once the very high order of plays produced at that time, and when is added the fact that Mr. Thompson received the greatest commendation of the Boston press critics, it will be apparent that his work must be of a very high degree of excellence.

As "Allen Rollitt" in "The Maister of Woodbarrow" he was excellent throughout, never for a moment forgetting the quaint dialect or simplicity of the part. As "Pygmalion" in "Pygmalion and Galatea" Mr. Thompson was excellent, and in all of the scenes in which he and Miss Hall appeared the audience became for the time being lost to itself.

The greatest thing that can be said of an actor, or a man, is that he completely fills any position in which he finds himself. This Mr. Thompson did while with the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company.

ROBERT ELLIOT

Mr. Elliot played with the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company a few weeks at the beginning of the summer season of 1902, playing "heavy business" most acceptably. In all his characters he shows a vigor that is appreciated in dramatic work. As "Jacques Frochard" in "The Two Orphans" his work was flawless and received great praise from the Boston papers. In "The Colleen Bawn" he played "Danny Mann," the most difficult part in the piece, and both his conception and his execution were artistic and at all points self-consistent.

Mr. Elliot's sojourn with the company was greatly enjoyed by his associates who admired his bohemian ways and great good nature and appreciated his ability as an actor.

WILLIAM HUMPHREY

Mr. Humphrey was the original "heavy man" of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company, and his work in that line will always be remembered. He is an actor by reason of natural talent so strong that he could have been nothing else. When only a boy he gained a certain knowledge of stage-craft by acting as an amateur, and when he thought of a life-work there was only this which he cared to follow or felt that he could. His first engagement was in Philadelphia in small parts, and his early experiences were varied.

Mr. Humphrey has played in almost every section of the United States either as a star or in support of the leading actors. This training has proved of great value, and has embraced all the branches of the profession: leads, heavies, romantic and society parts. In Shakespearian and historical rôles he has gained the highest commendation. He considers a stock company as affording the best opportunities to the young actor, and giving him a training that is not to be had in a company playing one or two plays for a season. For the trained actor it brings certain pleasures and possibilities of social and home life that are sufficient to overbalance any gain that may come to the actor on the road. There is a sense of friendliness in belonging to a congenial company and in playing to the same audiences that makes such stock companies as the Castle Square particularly desirable.

While at this theatre Mr. Humphrey played a long list of parts, all of which were thoroughly done. His favorite rôle while here was that of "Captain Davenport" in "Alabama." His "villains" were always skilfully acted, whether it was the gentleman with the finesse in his roguery or a ruffian of the "Bill Sykes" type.

Since leaving the Castle Square Theatre he has played a number of starring tours, and has supported many of the eminent actors of the day, his "Napoleon" in "More than Queen" in support of Julia Arthur being a character for which he was admirably fitted.

NED H. FOWLER .

Mr. Fowler is a native of Westfield, Mass. He made his first appearance on the professional stage at the Castle Square in a very small part, speaking scarcely a half-dozen words. His progress in his chosen profession was swift and at the time he left the company in May, 1900, he was the regularly engaged "heavy man." This remarkable advancement was earned by his great dramatic ability and the effectiveness of his work.

He made his first great hit as "Frank Bedloe" in "Shenandoah." Although a small part he had one fine scene which gave him an opportunity and he made the most of this chance. His advance from this on was rapid and safe.

In the part of "Col. Thorpe" in "The Heart of Maryland" his work was as finished as it could be and helped to make necessary the long run of this play at the Castle Square Theatre. The Boston Transcript of that week says: "To Mr. Fowler fell the unthankful task of portraying a traitor to both North and South—a man without a country—and his acting was easily one of the best things of the performance; in fact, the part was one of the best things he has ever done here, and we can recall nothing that he has not done well."

Mr. Fowler is a thorough sportsman and enjoys nothing better than wading a trout brook with a light rod or casting flies in a likely pool. At the end of a day's fishing his basket is sure to weigh the most and he takes great pleasure in telling just how the big one was landed.

Mr. Fowler makes friends quickly and easily, most people being drawn to him on first acquaintance.

Like all "heavy men," his ambition always was to play "leads" and since he left the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company he has been doing leading parts with great success having played a long Metropolitan engagement besides his tours to many of the large cities.

EDMUND BREESE

Mr. Breese was born in Brooklyn, N. Y. After graduating from the public schools he went West to grow up with the country. While working as herd boy on a Dakota ranch he took part in an amateur show and made such a marked success that he was engaged by Rhéa to play "heavies" in her company. This gave him the stage fever. He was rapidly promoted to leading parts and played two seasons with Rhea. He next joined James O'Neill's company and for three years he played second parts to Mr. O'Neill, leaving to accept a position at the Castle Square Theatre on November 19, 1900, staying with the company until September 1, 1902. While at the Castle Square Theatre he did "heavy business" and gained a great many warm friends by his remarkable dramatic ability.

Mr. Breese plays all his parts with a strength and vigor that would be impossible in a man not endowed with his superb physique. His "villains" are always bad men, and while detesting the character portrayed, the audiences have always been glad to give Mr. Breese the applause his acting merits.

In the few comedy parts which Mr. Breese had the opportunity to do his work was equally good. As "Leopold Brand," the head waiter in "At the White Horse Tavern," he proved just the man for the part, and "His whole performance was a very highly finished and telling piece of art; with an immense amount of cunning detail work, he never marred the main outlines of the character."

Mr. Breese during the past season has been on a starring tour, and lately has been doing a little vaudeville work.

CHARLES D. MACKAY

Mr. Mackay was born in Philadelphia, and is the son of the well-known actor and manager, F. F. Mackay. He was educated in New York, and graduated from New York University.

His first theatrical engagement was with Marie Wainwright and Louis James, with whom he played small parts in their various plays. He was engaged for three years by Manager Charles Frohman, doing juvenile business. He has played with many of the leading managers, including Mr. E. S. Willard, with whom he played "Laertes" in "Hamlet."

Mr. Mackay was one of the original members of the Castle Square Theatre Company, and his personal appearance and attractive manner have always been favorably regarded by all who have ever been patrons of the house. His excellent work is the result of his early training under his father, and also from his experience gained in the various companies with which he has been connected.

While on the stage the effect of his presence is pleasing in the extreme, and no matter what the part he is playing, his magnetism makes it acceptable.

Mr. Mackay has many times been cast in character parts, to the great amusement of the audience. He possesses a French dialect that is very mirthful, as will be recalled from his work in "The Amazons" and "Too Much Johnson." While with the company he played a great number of parts, all so well that special mention of any is not desirable.

For six years Mr. Mackay was a popular member with his comrades, and his sudden determination to seek new fields was a decided shock to his friends. Always affable, cheerful in disposition, he is the veritable "prince of good fellows."

JAMES O. BARROWS

Mr. Barrows was the comedian of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company at the beginning of the season of 1898, and stayed with the company until the middle of November, when he secured his release to accept a very flattering engagement elsewhere.

He is a comedian of a very high order, having thoroughly learned the intricacies of stage work many years ago, when apprenticeships were served in the theatrical profession the same as in other lines.

Mr. Barrows is an old favorite with Boston audiences, and during his career at this house his work was enjoyed. He carries all his parts with an ease and facility only attained by experience. As "Macclesfield" in "The Guv'nor" he scored a success in a part made famous by another Boston comedian, Mr. George W. Wilson, and Mr. Barrows lost nothing by the inevitable comparison. In "The Great Diamond Robbery" Mr. Barrows shone resplendent as "Senator Mc-Sorker," and gave a laughable impersonation of the traditional ward politician of New York City.

Mr. Barrows has lately been seen in vaudeville in a very capital sketch written specially for him and showing his dramatic skill to best advantage.

HORACE LEWIS

Mr. Lewis was one of the original members of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company and played at this theatre for a year and three months. He acceptably portrayed the leading comedy and character rôles, and was widely popular. He played a very large number of parts, and in all of them he proved his exceptional ability and versatility.

Mr. Lewis is a Boston boy, born and bred. He took to the stage while in his teens, and for thirty years has played innumerable characters throughout the length and breadth of the United States. For several years, with his wife and son, he starred successfully as "Monte Cristo." Just previous to his engagement at this theatre he was a member of Chas. Frohman's Company, in support of Annie Russell in "Sue," and many playgoers remember vividly his portrayal of "Silas Prescott" during the run of that play at the Boston Museum.

Mr. Lewis' most successful rôles at the Castle Square Theatre were "Old Eccles" in "Caste," "Micawber" in "Little Em'ly," "Old Rogers" in "Esmeralda," "Hop Kee" in "The First Born," and "Buchanan Billings" in "His Wife's Father."

After leaving the theatre Mr. Lewis was engaged by Julia Arthur, and played in "Ingomar," "A Lady of Quality," "Camille," and "As You Like It." He has also played in a number of other companies, and starred successfully in plays made famous by Sol Smith Russell.

Mr. Lewis possesses a fine sense of humor, and his character work was greatly appreciated by his associates as well as by the audience. His make-ups were works of art, and his appearance was mirthful before he spoke a line. The following was taken from the Boston Transcript, of Tuesday, April 5, 1898, during the week of the production of "Esmeralda":

"Mr. Lewis' 'Old Rogers' is an extremely vivid portraiture of a type of character habitual in a vast majority of American plays. That Mr. Lewis succeeds in making 'Rogers' distinct and individual above others of his type proves the completeness of his interpretation, and the breadth of his technique. In Mr. Lewis' hands, 'Old Rogers' is as genuinely human and sympathetic a figure as could be imagined."

GILES SHINE

Mr. Shine played the comedy parts at the Castle Square Theatre for a few months during the season of 1898-99. He is an actor of extensive experience, having played for many years with stock and repertoire companies. While with the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company his opportunities were not many, but were sufficient to show his worth and ability. His best part at this house was in "The Prodigal Daughter," in which he was cast as "Dudley Roper," a comedy villain with Hebraic dialect. Concerning this part, the following, taken from the Boston Journal of February 21, 1899, is an honest opinion of Mr. Shine's work:

"Mr. Giles Shine as 'Dudley Roper' gave a character sketch which quite overshadowed everything else, and yet was not out of harmony. He made much of the rôle, and everything he did was well done. In fact, it was quite the most artistic part of the play."

Mr. Shine is the husband of Lavinia Shannon, who played leading parts with the company during the summer of 1902.

TONY CUMMINGS

Mr. Cummings, whose recent death severely shocked his friends, was the original manager of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company and to him should be given the credit of bringing together the admirable dramatic company which inaugurated the successful career of this theatre.

Tony was born on the nineteenth day of February, 1869, in the city of Washington, where his father was proprietor of one of the leading hotels. Neither of his parents had any inclination for the stage, and considering his recognized success as an actor, his efforts are all the more praiseworthy. His early experience was gained wholly with amateurs, but his liking for the work was so great that he selected that line of business for his career.

He graduated from St. John's Military Academy at Alexandria, Va., in 1889, and secured his first engagement from answering an advertisement in a newspaper, joining the company without the knowledge of his parents, in a remote town in the State of New York. The engagement resulted in leaving Tony several hundred miles from home with only seven dollars in his pocket. He was successful in reaching Buffalo and secured an engagement in a variety theatre to do a specialty, making a hit. His pleasing personality brought him into close intimacy with the manager and he eventually was appointed manager of the house.

Leaving Buffalo he joined a travelling stock company and remained with it two years. In 1895 he joined the Frohmans and his recognized professional career began. He was playing a short engagement in a Washington stock company when he was engaged to organize the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company and his work was well done.

While with the Castle Square Theatre Company his work is well known, as he was one of the most popular men ever engaged. He played juvenile, comedy and character parts and did his work well. No attempt will be made to record any of his parts; they are all memories that need no awakening. His sudden ending is mourned by all the company, for he was held in high esteem by his associates.

JAMES A. KEANE

Mr. Keane was born in San Francisco, and after a good school education served his time as a draughtsman in the Union Iron Works of his native city. After engaging in a few other business ventures he took out a theatrical company a couple of seasons, and was successful. This turned his mind towards the stage, and he made his professional début on the road with the Empire Theatre Stock Company. He was a member of James O'Neil's Company several seasons, playing juvenile and character parts. He spent some time in stock and repertoire companies, playing a variety of parts and rolling up experience.

Mr. Keane played at the Castle Square Theatre during the summer of 1900, and made himself a favorite by his careful work. Leaving the company, he went to New York and played a number of engagements with more or less financial success, and returned to the Castle Square Theatre in April, 1901, and stayed somewhat more than a year.

Mr. Keane is now engaged in the hardware business in San Francisco.

Mr. Keane is of a very nervous temperament, and must be on the move at all times. While in Boston he spent some of his surplus energy in designing and building a "40-footer," much of the actual work being done by his own hands. A great lover of yachting, he spends his spare time on the water during the summer season.

In the many parts played at the Castle Square Theatre Mr. Keane showed his great ability as an actor, and went into the spirit of his characters with great intensity.

STANLEY KENT

Mr. Kent joined the company during the season of 1898-1899, playing small parts, and when he left the organization in 1901 his work was recognized to be of fine quality. His first decided hit was as "Tom Blinker" in "The Prodigal Daughter." The part is an honest stable boy, and an opportunity is offered for a fine bit of effective work which Mr. Kent seized and made the most of the character.

Mr. Kent was seen in almost every play put on during his sojourn and secured, by his acting, a host of friends. It was a distinct loss to the company when failing health obliged him to cancel his engagement. He is now living among the mountains of Vermont, his old home, and from his appearance on occasional trips to Boston one is assured of his gradual restoration to complete good health.

Mr. Kent is a great favorite with the members of the company, and his condition is carefully watched at all times.

WILLIAM CHARLES MASSON

Mr. Masson joined the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company in August, 1897, and stayed more than a year, doing the regular assortment of second parts falling to a stock actor. While with the company he showed himself very skilful in his work, taking great care of details, often making a point in a line that would be overlooked by many actors. In fact, it was in these little details that much of his success was gained. He was at his best in character work, paying great attention to make-up and costume. His lines were always spoken in a quiet manner that was very effective.

WILLIAM PAUL

Mr. Paul was a member of the company for a year and a half, in 1899 and 1900. At the time of his death, in 1901, he had been on the stage for nearly sixty years. With the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company his opportunities were not very great, although he was in a large number of performances. Character old men were his usual parts, and were performed with a skill that showed his many years of experience. His portrayal of "Owen Hathaway" in "May Blossom" showed him at his best.

Mr. Paul was a veteran of the Civil War, having seen service in the naval branch. He was at one time a national officer of the Naval Veterans' Association.

Congenial at all times, it was a great pleasure to listen to his reminiscences of stage life.

ALBAN W. PURCELL

Mr. Purcell was a member of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company during 1898, and was occasionally seen in the plays in which there was a part suited to his style of work. He is an actor of long experience in special rôles, and was engaged to portray "Admiral Farragut" and "Gideon Welles " in "The Ensign," being very successful in these parts.

Mr. Purcell is a very large man and makes a fine impression in parts of a military nature, or wherever a distinguished presence is needed.

He is now engaged in New York in a professional way.

LEON FAIRBROTHER

Mr. Fairbrother, the director of the orchestra, is a musician of ability, and satisfactorily performs his part of the work. He was the leader of the orchestra at Music Hall and, on account of the death of Mr. Heindl, was retained in his position and returned to the Castle Square Theatre with the company.

The position of conductor in a stock company is not confined to music alone; it requires a large amount of executive ability as well as a knowledge of music. Mr. Fairbrother is required to attend rehearsals and post himself on the music cues. At times these are very many and difficult to remember, some plays having over a hundred, and require constant attention. He also makes up the musical program each week and this alone takes much consideration, for the program must be in harmony with the spirit and time of the play. A glance at the musical program performed each week will give an idea of the nature of this work.

In many plays musicians are detailed for work behind the scenes, and special music has to be arranged to suit each separate requirement. All this work has to be attended to by the musical director. While the musicians are on duty only during the performances, the conductor is on duty all the time.

If one can but imagine the effect of a dramatic performance without an orchestra, the value of the work of the musical director may be appreciated.

Under Mr. Fairbrother's baton is a full orchestra of competent musicians. The music at the Castle Square Theatre has always been of a high order.

MAX HEINDL .

Mr. Heindl, whose sudden death from accident cast a gloom over the Castle Square Theatre, came from a family whose members have added much to the musical history of Boston. He was the conductor of the orchestra from the first performance in 1897 until his death on the last day of June, 1902, and his connection with the theatre went back to the days of the opera.

Mr. Heindl was born October 1, 1878, in Jamaica Plain. His tendency toward music caused his parents to give him a musical rather than an academic education. His father was his first teacher, and later he studied with Mr. Hirshfeldt and Gustave Strube. His first engagement was with the Globe Theatre Orchestra as first violin. Thence he went to the Park Theatre. His first appearance at the Castle Square Theatre was as first violin in the orchestra, at the time of the opera. He then acted as concert master, being given that position, although a young man, owing to his intimate knowledge of the masters and to his cool head.

When the opera season closed Mr. Heindl was made director of the orchestra. Many of his compositions for the piano are found in the homes of the musical people of the city and have had a wide circulation.

Mr. Heindl by his boyish appearance used to excite comment among visitors to the theatre, they believing it impossible for one so young to perform the duties in connection with his important position. An hour sufficed to prove that Mr. Heindl was a most capable conductor. He was a performer of great ability, and his violin solos were marvels of the musical art.

The programs of music on the following pages will show a taste in selection and an appropriateness to the play that make them of value in a book of this sort.

With the closing of the Castle Square Theatre for the season, and at the end of the last performance before going to Music Hall, Max Heindl ended his musical career. An accident most unfortunate cut off the existence of a gifted musician, a charming companion, a dear friend.

C. G. ALEXANDER

Mr. Alexander, the genial superintendent, while not a member of the dramatic company, is so well known to the patrons of the house that this record would be incomplete without his portrait. To him is entrusted the comfort of the audiences, and his assistants are always at the service of the patrons.

HOPE ROSS

Miss Ross was engaged by the Castle Square Theatre management in May, 1900, and stayed with the company nearly a year, playing "ingénue" and "soubrette" rôles. Her personal charms won for her the good will of the audience, and she was a great favorite during her career at the theatre. She left the theatre to retire permanently from the stage. She now lives in the Back Bay district of Boston, and thus far stage fever has not broken out again, although it is said that a person can be attacked by the disease more than once.

Her work was always carefully done, and her influence was felt in all her scenes. She will be remembered in the very funny song at the minister's donation party in "The Village Postmaster." In her "soubrette" rôles she was remarkably effective. As an "ingénue" her great beauty was shown to advantage, and she played with an archness and piquancy that was delightful to behold.

HOWARD HALL

Mr. Hall was an original member of the Castle Square Theatre Stock Company. While resting between seasons, he was prevailed on by Mr. Cummings to connect himself with the organization, and helped in no small way to create the initial strength of the company. He is an actor of much force, and has been very successful in his starring tours. A playwright of national reputation, many of his plays are being produced by leading actors in all parts of the country.

At present Mr. Hall is starring in "The Man Who Dares," a romantic drama written by himself, with which he is doing a good business.

"And down by the stream and beautiful rose,
Where life's dear romances are moulded,
A youth and a maid, by the light of the moon,
That sweetest of stories unfolded.
The maid plucked the rose, as an emblem of love,
And pinned to his coat as they wended,
Then the rose sweetly smiled to the clear running stream,
And thus its life's mission was ended."

THE PROLOGUE

"Two households, both alike in dignity
(In fair Verona, where we lay our scene),
From ancient grudge, break to new mutiny,
Where civil blood makes civil hands unclean.

"From forth the fatal loins of these two foes
A pair of star-crossed lovers take their life;
Whose misadventured piteous overthrows
Do, with their death, bury their parents' strife."
